10-YEAR PREDICTIONS

It is 2002, and Amy Burks is frenzied, trying to fulfill her duties as class president by organizing the Class of 1992's 10-year reunion. She calls on Missy Grimes, who is owner of a T. V. station but has gone on to become a protester against beauty contests, sometimes using violence, like squirting mustard and ketchup at the contestants. Missy is a former Miss West Virginia and claims that there is beauty in everyone. When Amy tried to reach Heather Hanshaw, she found that she and her three sons run a bike shop on her boardwalk at the Pocahontas-South Beach in North Carolina. She is also counseling North Carolinians who plan to move north to West Virginia.

When Amy gets off the train in Cass after the long trip from California, she bumps into Missy Jordan, who is the first woman fire chief in Pocahontas County. Working for her is Bo Casteel, who is a paramedic and breeder of dalmations for local fire departments. In Missy's daily life she is a model-spokesperson for a game show on WPOC-TV which is hosted by Erica Heinemann. Erica manages advertising for the T. V. station and owns her own townhouse in Dunmore.

Before Amy left California, she called Trampas Hammons, who told her that he had changed his lifestyle after six years of cleaning pools in Los Angeles. He is now going to be a hairstylist in the mall at Huntersville. Also living in California is Cheryl Green, who designs cards, calendars, etc., for Hallmark and runs her own boutique. Darlene Burgess focuses on French Braids at the "a la Darlene" beauty salon. Across from her beauty salon is Becky Campbell, a trendsetter in fashion, wearing long skirts and full blouses. Becky works for Tawnya Terry, a covergirl for a famous magazine, and owns her own boutique.

While Amy is driving from Cass, she looks over at the track at P. C. H. S. and sees Charlie Cole running, running, running, preparing himself for the Olympics of 2002. Cheering him on and sitting in the newly built bleachers is Donald Cook, who is a strong sports enthusiast who volunteers his time in helping local teams. When she stops her car at the school's parking lot, she hears Dana Cutlip's private jet overhead. She had seen Dana on the front page of "Wall Street Journal" a couple weeks before for being the Junior-Vice President of a major national industry who spends most of her time traveling around the world. When she walks up the steps to the school, like the good ole days after home ballgames, she notices Scottie Arbaugh working in the woods, while in the background she can see the outline of his mansion that he built by hand. As she reaches the top of the steps, she notices Johnnie Beverage sitting in the parking lot in his old green Bronco, still trying to figure out what to do with his life.

For the first time in 10 years, she opens the doors at P.C.H.S. and finds David Cochran sitting in the library still catching up on all the reading he missed while in high school! Donald Conley, an avid supporter of local librarians, is keeping the magazine racks current and up-to-date. As Donald flips through the latest "People" magazine, he discovers an old schoolmate, David Smith, on the cover for being one of the 10 best-dressed men in America.

While Amy looks through the shelves, she finds a new best-seller written by Cindy Horner. She decides to take some time to see what Cindy is doing. She finds that she has bought a ranch in Texas and has set a new fashion trend in formal women's Western Style wear. Hope Kinnison spends most of her time designing the latest styles for Cindy and also works for Sam Kincaid. Sam, after spending six years in the Army, opened a ladies' clothing factory in Hillsboro. Hope is one of his top designers. Her latest line just appeared on the front of "Vogue," bell-bottoms and elephant-leg jeans in pastel colors!

Amy, after a good hour in the library, decides that she's had enough of that place and walks down the halls to reminisce about the past. She wonders if Dawn Rodriguez is still carrying around the old ball and chain. Amy had just heard from Dawn's faithful cousin, Richard McCarty, who is the crew chief for Richard Petty, that she had just moved to Colorado. She also found out that Billy Roy had just won the Indy 500. It's amazing what one can find out in such a short time!

As Amy gets ready to leave, she notices Philissa Shafer standing in one of the rooms, and, very curious why, she decides to stop in and say hi. Philissa had just begun her 7th year of teaching Sex Education 101 at the school. She asked Philissa how she was doing and she replied with one line, "I still want to go to the beach!" They said their goodbyes, and Philissa promised to see her at the reunion. Amy left the building again, the building in which she had made most of her memories.

As she gets into her car, a big 18-wheeler drives by and John Gibson is singing at the top of his lungs to the radio as he tries to get to Marlinton before the pool room closes for the night.

Back on the road again, Amy cruises into the nearest gas station. The attendant asks her "How much, lady?" She sees David Dilley standing beside her car. They start talking about the reunion, and time gets away from them. David's wife is expecting their fourth child, and he's building an additional room onto their new farm-house. She also finds out that his cousin, Ann Chestnut, president of the PTO, had just had her third child and was living in her house in Frost with her husband and three dogs. Amy noticed a big log truck behind her. She looked out her rear-view mirror and saw Eric Dean in his tandem log truck. She gets out of her car to say hi and asks him, "What's up?" He tells her that he is working on an invention that is going to make him a millionaire.

She now has to go to the "Pocahontas Times" office to run an announcement about the reunion and sees Cameron Barkley working alongside the editor-in-chief of the paper. Cameron is the chief executive on making sure that all the papers get delivered on Wednesday. She couldn't believe her eyes when she saw Lindell Alderman sitting in front of a computer printing the personals. She noticed an ad that was from Terry Brickles, who was advertising for welding on a 9 - 5 schedule. They said that they had recently heard from Roy Arbogast, who is working in the southern part of the state in the coal fields. Lindell had just printed a banner that read, "Way to go, Lori Cook, on your exemplary attendance at work!! Love, Mom." It is nice to come home and see that everyone is getting along really well with their lives.

It had been a long time since she had gone to Snowshoe, and even though it wasn't ski season, she knew that she would see someone she knew there. On her way up, she ran into Joe Howard and Keith Hannah, who own and operate "Chippendales East" at Slatyfork. No, they do not perform there as reported in the "Enquirer." Really! They are known for their Saturday Night Sing-Alongs. James Lambert, assistant principal at P.C.H.S., now appears there each Friday night as a stand-up comedian to open the show for Mark King, now a singer. Mark decided to follow his nickname's career (B. B. King). She heard that Steve Kellison has become a World Champion Carpenter. He can pound a 10-penny nail in three hits. He just returned from a contest in Paris where he saw Major Pam Jackson. Pam is in charge of the Military Rest and Relaxation Center in Paris.

When she got to the top of the mountain, the first person she saw was Tim Nicely, standing at the top of Skidder with his coon hounds, trying to rekindle burnt brain cells he had lost when he was in school. Stacey Oliver was also at the top of the mountain. Her plane had just let her off, and she was trimming the bushes. Amy asked her if she had her twenty bucks, and she said, "I'll pay you $10 to forget all about it!"

How could one forget "The Kid," Matthew Workman? He owns one of the biggest farms in the United States, and you can see it when you look off the mountains at the top of Snowshoe. With several children and married, he successfully runs his farms with great strength. His partner in the farming business, the last time Amy heard, was an old friend that they had gone to school with, John Combs, who was "married with children."

Amy, still very interested in the latest magazines, stopped at the store and bought herself a "National Geographic" to give her something to do for the time being. She was shocked to see Clinton Mick's face in the inside for being one of their photographers. She turned the page again and saw someone else she knew, Dawnn McLaughlin; she had gone to Africa to work in the Peace Corps and had been there for five years. Amazed with what she saw, she decided to take a walk around since the weather had become so nice. She saw a huge billboard on the side of the hill, and Brad Dunz's face was printed on it. He was snowboarding for an international professional circuit and was part owner of a snowboard company.

After the long day, Amy was really exhausted with having ridden such a long time, so she got into her Volvo and headed off the mountain. It was getting late by then and she hadn't had much to eat that day, so she stopped in at Kentucky Fried Chicken. She remembered that Susan Gainer used to work there, so maybe she still did. Come to find out, Susan had moved to Alaska and gotten a degree in Business Administration and was running a profitable chain of KFC's there.

Knowing that she had to get up early, she headed home for the night. Since it had been such a long time since she had seen her parents, she stopped by a flower shoppe in Marlinton to get her mother some roses. But she saw something she had never expected -- there stood Lewis Mullenax arranging flowers. He told her that he was moonlighting as a florist while teaching school during the day.

When Amy got home that night, she turned on the T. V. to get a glimpse of the 11:00 news. The screen all of a sudden read "Save the Animals," and Daniel Sollday's face appeared on the screen. She couldn't believe her eyes! Had she not seen about half of her class that day and yet there was another schoolmate of hers. Daniel explained how he is involved in veterinarian medicine at WVU and is an active member of the "Save the Animals" Organization. Dan's able assistant is Chris Baxter.

Before she went to sleep, she wanted to check the weather, but first there were the NBA scores given by the sportscaster. She sees Damian Elliott's face on the T. V. and the sportscaster says, "Tonight in Phoenix, the Suns topped the Bulls with a remarkable game played by Damian Elliott, the captain for the team." Amy thought to herself, how exciting this is, and dozed off to sleep.

The next morning Amy turned on her trusty old radio to see if it still worked. Being as homesick as she was, she flipped it over to 1370 am, to see if there was any local news. Not aware that WVMR was newly expanded and was managed by Teresa Wilfong, she sat down and listened for a few minutes. "This is Teresa Wilfong reporting live from Aspen, Colorado. I'm here with Ben Ziegler. Ben, how does it feel to have your latest invention earn such a big award?" Ben replied, "I'm a very well-known inventor here in Colorado, but most of my time I spend painting and using my artistic abilities to produce some wonderful work." Teresa says, "Ben, does anyone help you create your artwork?"

Yes, they do. Catrina Sparks helps me design my work. Catrina recently got married and has had award-winning artwork in local galleries." As the interview faded out, Amy was laughing, because she had not heard from Teresa, Ben, or Catrina since graduation.

Amy then got dressed and started preparing herself for the day ahead. She decided to call Rachel Irvine to see if she was going to be at the reunion today. Rachel's mom answered the phone. Amy asked if Rachel was there, and she said, "No, Rachel is now a doctor in Mexico. She became a nun when she realized she could help people better if she did not spend so much time dating and could now devote all of her efforts to her job!" Amy thanked her and hung up.

Before she got into her car, she decided that she should check her mailbox to see if she had gotten any last-minute RSVP's from any of her former classmates. When she opened the mailbox, letters fell out everywhere. She was disappointed when she started reading them. First there was a letter from Audrey Lovelace, saying that she wasn't going to be able to make it to the reunion because she had moved to Waverly, Ohio, and had become a goat breeder and cheese producer. Another letter was from Lori Martin. She apologized that she could not make it because she was expected in surgery that day. It would also be hard on her six children to come all the way to West Virginia from Pittsburgh.

She found two more letters. One was from Amy Workman, who apologized because she was still teaching Roy to drive and she was living in Alaska working in the medical field. The other one was from Kristi Miller. She too apologized because she had to preach at a revival at her church in Waycross, Georgia. Well, it didn't look like too many people were going to be at the reunion, but it was in less than six hours, so she couldn't cancel it.

When she left the house that day to go to Stillwell to see if everything was working out, she forgot her wallet and money. So she stopped at the new bank at Hillsboro. When she walked in the door, she saw Chuck Arbogast standing behind the counter, counting the money in his drawer. Chuck was mumbling under his breath, "Well, if I had a better job, this money would be mine!" The bank he was working for was run by Tina Madison, who was also a bank executive in Kalamazoo, Michigan.

On the way back from the bank, Amy stopped off at Stillwell Junior High to see her little cousin. When she walks into the office, she runs into Rachel Broyles, who is the Data Consultant at the school. She is entering grade reports for the final semester. She asks to see Mr. Doug Davis' third grade science class. When she sees Doug, he tells her that he is married and has 3 tow-headed boys. He had just moved from Arkansas, when the job opening came about at S.J.H. Then there is a knock at the door, and Ms. Molly Fuller enters the room and asks to speak to one of his students. Molly then realizes that Amy is standing across from her. They begin to talk, and Amy finds out that Molly is teaching in the school and that she has a lovely family of boys. Molly told Doug that there was something wrong with the bathroom sink in the teacher's lounge. So they called Chris Coy, who during the day is an electronics expert and is a plumber by night.

Before Molly left, Amy asked her if she had heard from Debbie Galford. Molly said that Debbie is married to a professor at MIT and is putting off having kids until she finds the time. She's also a Ph.D. candidate in Philosophy.

Now Amy had to make sure that everything was going as planned. First, she needed to check on the D. J., so she called the radio station to see who was going to do the job. They gave her a list of options and then she heard a name that was familiar to her. Jessie Walton had become a popular D. J. around the world. Great, a classmate!

Amy got back into her car and headed for Stillwell. She was surprised to see a few friendly faces there already. Lisa Sharp was sitting at the gazebo studying for a test she had when she got back to Yale. Lynn Dean was also there. She'd arrived early from her house at the beach where she was running her own home-shopping company. Mike Taylor was over by the mud-bog track leaning up against his 1975 Ford truck, and he told Amy that he farmed on the side to support his habits (tickets, etc.).

It was now barely an hour before the reunion. Everything was perfect. Larry Evans was the next to arrive. Introducing Amy to his new wife, he told her that he'd been building pre-fab homes and had just built a log cabin in the woods for him and his wife.

Then, Tim Coughlin pulled in and was walking around whistling unconsciously, as he always had. She'd overheard Tim tell Mike Thomas that he was working on his Master's degree. Mike explained to him that he was still in the Reserves and was working as a parole officer at the rehabilitation center in Weston.

Amy had hired John Shinaberry to cater the occasion. John manages his own restaurant and also his own farm in Pocahontas County. When Amy ran into Heather Hanshaw, she told Amy that Stacey Lambert had bought the Boys Camp in Minnehaha and was counseling teenagers with his own philosophy "Just get high on life," and that he was planning a speaking tour in the East.

Over in the corner by an oak tree, a crowd of people had gathered. Curious with what was going on, Amy wandered over there. Amanda Barb, Tammy Barb, Shelvy Barrett, and Stephanie Gibson were comparing their children's pictures. All you could hear was, "Oh, he is so cute," or "Oh, she's so sweet!" Amy laughed and thought to herself that she would've never imagined this. Then Amy saw Mrs. Rhea, their class director, so she decided to find out what her nephew Lewis Arbogast was up to. She told Amy that he had moved out of state to work at a big corporation.

As they were talking, she noticed Randall Coleman wandering around in the field. He must still be looking for that "irresistible" lady.

After half an hour, most everyone was there. A few guys were talking about the latest sports. Richard McMillion was trying to get all the "guys" to shop at the Sport Mart in Charleston, where he had become salesman. Among the guys was Rick Moore; he was very anxious to tell them about his tropical fish and pet store that he'd bought in Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Over at the gazebo, Chawn Loudermilk was giving his recipes for the pizza sauce that he makes at the Pizza Hut in Waco, Texas, to Angelena Wilfong-Ryder and Kim Ryder, who want to show their husbands that they really can cook.

Standing on the top of the sliding board was Dottie Malcom, auctioneering off old yearbooks to students that didn't want anyone to see their old pictures. John Pritt, who is an interpreter, after spending many directed studies in English class, was trying to figure out what Dottie was saying.

Now that it was time to eat, Amy asked Mike Layne to say grace. Mike had become the student spiritual advisor for the students at WVU. Mike recently surprised a group of his students with his skiing skills when he visited Snowshoe. His four daughters knew he could do it!

Conversation during dinner was the way that she had expected. She overheard Melanie Riffe saying that she was a stockholder in AT&T. Charlie May was working for Bowling, Incorporated in Bowling Green, Ohio, and Susan McKenney had become a dude ranch operator in Oklahoma.

Amy sat down beside Leslie Sheets. When they started talking, Leslie told her that she was the accountant for the Mountain View. Leslie laughed and said, "Yeah, I'm still chasing after those older men!"

After dinner, Amy noticed Carol Roberts sitting under a tree. Carol had just returned from backpacking in Europe with some friends.

When the whole thing was over and everyone had gone, Amy noticed Aracoma Sapanski sitting at a picnic table. Amy asked her if anything was wrong and Aracoma said, "No, I'm a psychologist trying to analyze the Class of '92!!!"
